Press release

The Server Labs donates IT equipment to the Asociación de Técnicos de la Informática (ATI).

The Server Labs provided ATI with servers and network hardware intended for the non-profit organisation's solidarity programme.

21 May, 2010: The Server Labs (TSL) have provided ATI, a non-profit organisation for the Spanish IT sector, with a consignment of fully functional servers and network equipment destined for ATI's programme "Informática Solidaria".

The equipment became obsolete when The Server Labs recently moved their entire data centre to Amazon's EC2 cloud, saving substantial costs in the process.

"Informática Solidaria" aims to mediate between donors of IT equipment and applicants looking to receive free of charge second-hand hardware, usually entities with a social cause.

"The ability of our solidarity programme to provide free IT equipment depends entirely on donations", declares a spokesperson for ATI's "Informática Solidaria" programme. "We are grateful to companies like The Server Labs who make it possible for us to continue with this important project."

"Our business requires that we constantly invest in the latest innovations such as cloud computing to provide the highest service level to our customers. We are glad to give any outmoded equipment to organisations like ATI who will put it to good use", states Dolores Saiz, CEO of The Server Labs.
